12 - 55: Personal Level - You are true to yourself and easily show your true nature. You don't change because of the people you are with because you don't want to compromise the real you. There is a genuine quality about you that people find endearing. Following rules that other people impose on you is difficult. You prefer to carve your own path and follow your own rules. What other people think of you is not the most important thing in your life. It's more important to be true to yourself. This can make it difficult for you to make compromises with people. At times, it's preferable to be alone than to be required to make compromises to be with someone else.

56 - 100: Relationship Level - Your desire to be your own person is balanced by your desire to be appreciated by other people. You are able to make compromises to stay in relationships and are willing to make changes in your life for the benefit of the people in your life. You are generally agreeable to following rules because it's more important for you to be a part of the group than to risk isolation. You are very conscious of the effect you have on other people and this guides your behavior. However, your tendency to sacrifice your own ideals for other people can sometimes backfire on you. You may flip flop between a need to make other people happy and to make yourself happy, or you may feel torn and frustrated by the need to satisfy yourself versus other people.

101 - 144: Universal Level - You don't mind standing out as different in order to live by your own philosophy of life. What other people think of you is less important than upholding your ideals. You live by the rules that you deem worthy and may resist rules that go against your own strongly-held beliefs. In relationships, you stay true to yourself. Although you are able to see another person's point of view, it is difficult for you to change yours because you feel so strongly about your own ideas. You are compassionate toward people in relationships, but there is an impersonal nature to the compassion. People may sometimes see you as condescending or arrogant because of the confidence you have in your own views.

How this relates to relationships - It can be difficult for people with vastly different scores to be a relationship because their point of view regarding relationships is different. For example, a person in the personal level will have difficulty relating to a person in universal level in a long-term, intimate relationship because their values and perspective on life and relationships are very different.

Note - Your score is an overall representation of your planet's signs, and represents your overall level of astrological maturity. However, you still experience the individual effects of each planet's signs, especially your sun and moon. If your score puts you into a level where you don't actually have planets or you just have one planet, you are still in that level as far as your overall astrological maturity level. However, you will strongly relate to the levels where your planets actually fall, especially your sun and moon. This dynamic is seen in the example provided.
